Police Brutality

General Background

Police violence is a serious problem in the United States, and one that doesn't affect all Americans equally. The rate of fatal shootings by police differs greatly based on ethnicity, highlighting a culture of racism in law enforcement. Between 2015 and October 2021, the rate of fatal police shootings was 37 for every million Black Americans and 28 for every million Hispanic Americans. In contrast, the rate for White Americans was significantly lower at 15 fatal police shootings per million white people (source Statista Research Department).

In recent years, there has been an increase in international awareness of police violence and police racism spurred on by several high-profile cases such as Trayvon Martin, Breonna Taylor, and George Floyd. Tragically, despite the publicity surrounding these cases, the Black Lives Matter movement, and the protests that took place all over the world, there is still an upward trend in fatal police shootings in our country.

Police brutality cases are complicated, and our lawyers will take the time to help you understand your legal rights in simple terms. Hendler Flores Law is committed to holding police officers accountable for unnecessary violence.

Giving You a Voice

Our firm represents several victims and their families in cases involving police brutality.

We represent Brenda Ramos in her fight for justice for her son Mike Ramos, who was fatally shot by police in the back of the head through his car window. We represent the grieving family of Alex Gonzales who died in a road rage incident involving an off-duty Austin police officer. Our firm also represents several victims of police violence who were injured at a Black Lives Matter rally in Austin in the summer of 2020.

Our lawyers care deeply about victims of police brutality and will act intentionally to hold law enforcement officers accountable for their actions that resulted in your injuries or your loss. You deserve justice.
